GEN. COLLINS SPEAKS.

General Collins spoke eloquently. He said: The chairmanship of a convention in the past filled by the foremost men of the party was appreciated by him as a distinction of the highest character. A young man of the nation, he said, had heard more of their fame of the clash of arms and the throes of war than of the principles of government. So it was no wonder the question is asked and so often answered, "What difference is there between the two parties?" The speaker replied to the query with a pithy summary of the political creed of Thomas Jefferson, the apostle of democracy. To this General Collins added the modern economic rule that no more taxes should be levied on the people in any way than is necessary to meet the honest expenses of government. True to these principles the democratic party had fought successfully our foreign wars, projected out efforts in every clime compelled the respect of all nations for our flag, added imperial domain to our territory and increased peace, prosperity and happiness to all the peoples. False to these principles the great federal, whig and know-nothing parties went down never to rise [illegible] were the representatives of the party that had survived all others, the united, triumphant, invincible democracy, prepared to strike down forever the last surviving foe in November. This country has been the asylum for all good men from over the earth who flee from want and oppression, and mean to become Americans, but we invite and welcome only friends to this ground and allegiance to the republic. Our institutions cannot change to meet hostile wishes nor be so much as sensibly modified, save by the peaceful, deliberate action of the mass of our people in accordance with the constitution or the laws of the land, and the man is not a true American who, [illegible] by word or action, in any way attempt or thought, in any way attempt to weaken the foundation of this splendid politic structure, the republic of the United States. General Collins warmly and at length eulogized the administration of President Cleveland as having triumphantly justified his election. The democracy now stood on the edge of another and perhaps greater contest with relation to the electors, not held before for a generation, that for responsibility, for the great trust of the government. No longer critics but criticized, they were confronted by a wily, unscrupulous and desperate foe. There would be no blot on the record that would not be magnified, no circumstance not tortured and misrepresented, no disappointment not exaggerated into a revolt, no class or creed it would not try to inflame, no passion not attempted to rouse, no fraud that would not be willingly perpetrated. But the appeal of the democratic party is not to passions or to prejudice, to class or faction, or race or creed, but to the sound common sense, the interest, the intelligence and patriotism of the American people, upon their stainless record for the last four years and upon their earnest efforts as yet incomplete to reduce and equalize the burdens of taxation the democrats enter the canvass. General Collins closed by appealing to patriotic, independent citizens who four years ago forsook their old allegiance and who since that time have nobly sustained the administration, to remember that it is a fatal error to weaken a politic organization by which great reforms have been achieved and risk them in the hands of their known adversaries. The democratic temple is open to all, and if in council they could not agree in all things, their motto nevertheless was, "In essentials, unity, in non-essentials, liberty; in all things charity."

THE ADDRESS WELL RECEIVED.

Collins spoke in a sufficiently clear and distinct voice to be heard in every portion of the hall. He was frequently interrupted with loud applause. At the conclusion of his speech Collins was again loudly and warmly greeted. The gentlemen selected to represent the various states as vice presidents then proceeded to take seats upon the platform, while the band played an inspiring air. The chairman stated that he had been informed by the chairman of the committee on resolutions that that committee would be unable to report before eight o'clock.

Schewalter of Missouri offered a resolution declaring taxes, including import duties, should be levied only for the purpose of raising revenue to meet the needs of the government administered economically, and that the taxes should be on luxuries and not necessities, as at present.

WOMEN'S PETITION.

The chairman announced that the secretary would read a petition for the consideration of the convention. The paper proved to be a request from the woman's convention, recently held in Washington, stating that two of its members had been appointed to make a short talk to the convention on behalf of the women of America. This request was accompanied by the promise that if it were granted by the convention the representation of the women's organization would only occupy the attention of the convention for ten minutes. It was moved that the women be heard and it was agreed to.

SYMPATHY FOR SHERIDAN.

Campbell of New York presented resolutions as follows, which were adopted:

Resolved, That this convention takes occasion to express its unfeigned sorrow in the serious and dangerous illness of General—Phil. Sheridan, and to him whose noble and valiant deeds will ever be enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen we extend our sincere sympathy. We earnestly trust that the great soldier and distinguished patriot will meet with speedy recovery, and that divine providence may spare him to the nation for many years [illegible].

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to General Sheridan expressive of the heartfelt sentiments of the democracy of the United States.

THE WOMEN SNUBBED.

Mrs Merriweather, on behalf of the Washington meeting, then mounted the platform and was received with applause. She said she was delegated to ask that this great convention help to make a practice for this nation and confirm to its principles, universal suffrage. Mrs Merriweather's voice was not strong enough to fill the hall, and she was frequently interrupted with cries of "louder" and the band struck up an air before she had concluded but she remained in her seat until her [illegible] time had expired.

Resolutions were then offered to recess until 8 o'clock this evening and until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

NOMINATING SPEECHES.

Pensell of Pennsylvania moved that the roll of states and territories be called and the names of candidates for president and vice president be placed in nomination, but no ballot be taken until after the committee on resolutions shall have reported. Thurman

WILD ENTHUSIASM.

Dougherty's speech was delivered with fine effect, in his best style, and aroused unbounded enthusiasm. When he mentioned the name of Cleveland and referred to his public acts and utterances the convention fairly shouted itself hoarse. Delegates mounted chairs and waved hats, canes and handkerchiefs. The spectators joined in the applause and a band in the gallery helped along with horns and drums, but their blare and noise could scarcely be heard above the general din. As Dougherty finished his impassioned speech, some one in the west gallery tore aside a curtain, which hid a big portrait of Cleveland, upon the face of the great picture of the capitol building, revealing to the full gaze of the convention the well known features of Cleveland. This incident aroused the enthusiasm of the convention to fever heat for the first time during its proceedings. The hall was at once filled with cheer upon cheer, and the great body of people in the auditorium, balcony and galleries arose and stood shouting at the top of its voice until the din became almost deafening. Hats were thrown in air, red bandanas waved from a thousand hands, and white and gray hats were frantically thrust upon the points of canes and waved until the owners became exhausted. Some one on the stage crowned a bust of the president on the [illegible] which was the signal for a greater burst of shouts and cheers than before. Spectators and delegates tore the red, white and blue bunting from the pillars and from the face of the balconies and waved these improvised banners all over the hall for ten minutes. This great outburst did not cease until every body was absolutely exhausted. It was exactly six minutes before the chairman was able again to obtain the attention of the convention. The call of states was then continued, but there was no response until Illinois was reached, when Morrison arose. He received an enthusiastic greeting. He merely desired to formally

[illegible] Vorhees moved that the convention take recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow. The committee on resolutions would not, he said, report this afternoon, and the convention would have to be here to-morrow morning and the intervening time would be properly used for securing harmony and success for the democratic party.

Baughman of Maryland favored the motion, and called attention to the fact that a number of distinguished members of the convention were absent upon the committee on resolutions.

Pennell of Pennsylvania said the committee on resolutions was subordinate to the convention and could be directed by
it. He proposed to move that the committee be instructed to report to this body at a given time.
The committee had already been in session nearly twenty-four hours, and if it could not agree within that time it never would agree. If the committee was not ready to bring a report, let it bring two.

Flower of New York moved that when the convention take a recess it be to meet to-night at 8 o'clock. The motion was defeated, yeas 367, nays 450.

Voorhees then moved that the convention
take a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock. There had been no differences existing in the proceedings of the convention up to this time, but now there was

A DIFFERENCE OF OPINION,

and he thought in the interest of justice and fair play that a recess should be taken.

White of California seconded the motion, stating that he did so, not to prevent the nomination of any candidate but because the convention must have a platform carefully and deliberately adopted. When the vice president was nominated it would be hard to hold the convention together. He knew the gentlemen were anxious to raise their voice for the same man he was in favor of, but he thought it better that a recess be taken before the call of the roll of states on Voorhees' motion was complete.

It was evident that it would have a large majority, and at the suggestion of the chair the convention by unanimous consent agreed to suspend the call and agreed to the motion. The chair at 1:58 announced that the convention stood adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Victory for Scott.

St. Louis, June 6. The platform as decided upon by the committee to-night is a compromise compact between Scott and Gorman, to secure for the president an endorsement which would be satisfactory to him and yet not weakening the party at the polls in doubtful states.
The opposition was strong enough to enforce some concessions from the extreme tariff reformers. At the same time the latter had votes enough to compel the opposition to consent to the endorsement of the president's message as the correct interpretation of the tariff plank of 1884 and to secure endorsement of the Mills bill by a resolution added to the tariff plank. Thus, with the exception of yielding a little stronger declaration on the tariff than he at first proposed to, Congressman Scott, the direct representative of the administration, is likely to secure all he set out to secure [illegible] Thurman and a moderate tariff declaration

Work on the Platform.

St. Louis, June 6.—It was after 1 o'clock this morning when Gorman of the sub committee on the platform addressed the committee in relation to the tariff plank, advocating a reiteration of the revenue reduction clause in the platform of 1884, and favoring a reduction of internal revenue taxation.

Watterson replied eloquently and at considerable length, appealing for an explicit enunciation of the party's position upon the tariff issue which it could go to the polls, free from the stigma of an attempt to straddle this great issue which he said had been justly charged to the platform of 1884.

[illegible] G. [illegible] at 8 o'clock [illegible] out action, the sub-committee, at 2 a. m., adjourned to 8:30 o'clock.

It was within a quarter of 10, the time set for assembling of the convention, before the committee on platform got together to-day. The sub-committee which had been in conference until after midnight reported its inability to reach any conclusion, and the committee as a whole

The Platform.

St. Louis, June 6.—Newspaper men tried to get a copy of the platform but the committee [illegible]
Watterson, however, said to a reporter:
The substance is this: We renew our fidelity to democratic principles and re-affirm the platform of 1884, and endorse the last annual message of the president, and declare it a correct interpretation of the platform, and appreciate the efforts of our democratic representatives in congress to secure reduced taxation. In a separate resolution to be offered to the convention to-morrow we commend the Mills bill, urging its passage at an early day.

When asked whether this was in accordance with his original ideas, Watterson said: Well, yes. My ideas were originally opposed to the recurrence to the platform of 1884, and when that course was suggested I very naturally opposed it because it had been subjected to doubt of its construction. Nevertheless, the situation is this: That the platform of 1884, when coupled with endorsement of President Cleveland's message, as a true interpretation of it and commendation of the Mills bill, meets my most hearty approval.

Watterson, [illegible] Watterson ventured one of the reporters to their patient but nearly exhausted victim. "What about silver?"

"Oh, d—n silver," shouted Watterson, unable to submit longer, and bursting away from his interviewers he was gone.

The Field Clear for Thurman.

St. Louis, June 6.—No doubt now exists in anybody's mind that Thurman will be nominated on the first ballot by acclamation. Governor Gray's supporters admit he has more than two-thirds, and it is not likely that Gray will be placed in nomination at all. The convention is expected to finish its labors in an hour's time to-morrow morning. Governor Gray's friends made an effort to-day to take advantage of the circumstances which led to adjournment of the convention. To carry out its part of the compact by every means under its control, the national committee has sought to delay proceedings and postpone conclusion of the convention labors. The delegates had discovered this scheme and a vast majority of them went into the session to-day determined to remain there until the formalities were made and the platform. It is well understood that if the matter had been forced to an issue this afternoon Gray's name would not have been presented by his supporters. The influence of the national committee was holding back the report of the committee on platform and a dark danger here presented itself. It was that the majority in the convention would go ahead with the nomination for vice president, and this done a majority of the delegates would leave for their homes on the night trains. It being necessary for the convention to take recess without a vice president, the Indiana men were smart enough to seize upon their advantage and make the most of it. Promptly sending their men out through the hotels they claimed the unexpected delay of 24 hours was a victory for the opposition, and that the state would yet be broken. They renewed their visits to other delegations and repeated their now well-worn argument. Some anxiety was felt by Thurman men, when it became known another meeting of the Ohio delegation was called for this evening. The fear was expressed that they would try to revoke the action by which Thurman was endorsed. No such action was taken, however.

The Contest of the Day.

St. Louis, June 6.—Among the features of the day in the convention was the four-cornered struggle between Thurman men, Gray men, tariff reformers and the protective tariff element. Thurman delegates were eager to have the nomination for vice president made at once while the enthusiasm was at fever heat. They were reinforced by the tariff reformers, who were incensed at the delay of the committee on platform and eager to administer a rebuke. The Gray men were using Fabian tactics and had able allies in the protectionists. Roswell Flower and Daniel W. Voorhees were the opposing leaders, the latter being regarded as spokesman of Gray. Though outnumbered many times over the phalanx under Voorhees was making a most determined fight, contesting every inch in a way that threatened to develop ugly feelings. Just when things had a particularly squally aspect White of California in the interest of the Old Roman poured oil on the troubled waters. The postponement asked for by Voorhees was advocated by White on broad grounds in a manner as magnanimous as it was unexpected. Many left the hall with dark forebodings regarding what might take place in the platform committee before the committee reassembled, but a great majority of delegates fell to discussing on the way out of the hall the exciting details of their own proceedings.

Democratic Negroes.

St. Louis, June 6.—Nearly a hundred representative colored democrats from more than a dozen states, but chiefly from the north, held a meeting here yesterday afternoon and organized a negro national democratic league. Resolutions were adopted endorsing the administration of President Cleveland, and the league adjourned to meet in Chicago at the call of the chairman.

Hewitt Excommunicative.

New York, June 6.—Mayor Hewitt was asked to-day what he thought of the renomination of President Cleveland. "I expected it," he replied. "The party could do nothing else."

"Do you consider the nomination a good one?"

"I will not express an opinion."

When asked what he thought the tariff plank in the platform should be he also declined to express an opinion and added that until his term as mayor expired he intended to take no part in politics.

The injunction is observed in General Lee's camp.

The great figure in the last democratic convention was Manning. So far he has not been mentioned in this. He was a much abler manager than [illegible] man.

Tom Patterson and Senator Gorman will have an opportunity to exchange views on primary methods. It would not be surprising if the carried tickets would vote the [illegible] in favor of Baltimore primaries.

If the Chicago convention is going to be a funeral, according to the democrats, there seems to be plenty of men who wish to figure as corpses. Even this much cannot be said of the gathering at St. Louis.

Our report of the proceedings of the convention is written sympathetically. Everyone speaks eloquently. Everything is enthusiastically applauded. [illegible] saints, and only man is vile.

General Black's boom for vice president is in as badly crippled a state as the general himself. It will be quietly laid aside, and the general can devote himself to the hard task of proving that the democratic party is a real friend of the old soldier.

The Oregon election insures a republican successor to Senator Dolph. The democrats had great expectations of capturing the legislature, but they were ignominiously beaten. This does not seem to be a good year for administration endorsements in the most popular way.

If some curious democrat at St. Louis should rise in the convention and exclaim in the language of Mr. Webster Flanagan, of Texas, "What are we here for," the question would have to be referred to Messrs. Scott and Gorman for a satisfactory answer.

Traces of a smile must have lingered around the mouth of Henry Watterson's "star-eyed goddess" of reform when her faithful worshipper was made chairman of the platform committee. But the smile will soon give place to her customary sadness, when she observes how little has been done for the cause of genuine reform.

The New York Sun is much out of joint these times. It is against Cleveland personally and declared he could not be re-nominated a few months ago. It is also against the Mills bill. As illustrating the fact that several states were against tariff reform, it mentioned several reformers who were defeated as delegates. Among others it mentioned Breckinridge of Kentucky. This is a queer inference in a state that elects Henry Watterson.

The stereotyped remark about Tilden's patriotism in giving up the presidency to which he was elected has been made in the national democratic convention. The reasons Tilden enunciated were good and sufficient. He was a natural coward and would not fight. He was lawyer enough to know that the decision of the electoral commission placed Hayes' title beyond all question. And again knowing how he had tattered [illegible] the electors of Oregon, Florida and South Carolina, he did not dare make a fight that had no warrant in law and bring about an exposure of his own corrupt acts. Tilden deserves to rank higher as a railroad wrecker than as a patriot.

The delay of the resolutions committee to report the platform to the democratic [illegible] justifies the assertion which has often been made that the party was far from being united on this question. Notwithstanding the absence of Mr. Randall who is the most avowed opponent of the president's tariff policy, the committee seems unable to reach any unanimity of sentiment on this subject, and the tariff plank will doubtless be as complete a straddle as that of 1884. It is stated that the same plank will be reiterated, with a mild indorsement of the president's message. The democrats, apparently, are going to make another effort to deceive the voters regarding their position on this vital issue, but the voters will [illegible] ately for them, do not appear to be a mood to be deceived.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

WHERE POPULAR MINSTRELS GET THEIR MELODIES.

English Songs "Faked" Over—Old Conundrums Revived—"Brer" Jasper Made Use Of—Popular "Hits" Ridiculous—The Burlesque Stump Speech and Its Genesis.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, May 28.—Numerous songs that are now being sung at many of the theatres and concert halls of the country in the English, "faked." They are garbled versions of famous English songs, which are pruned and patched up with new titles and slight changes in [illegible]. They are skillfully arranged to suit the popular taste, and sprinkled with topical phrases and localized to give them a new [illegible] original creative conception. Hence fit into a popular want like a round peg into a round hole. They are applauded as brilliant features of original talent, a compliment which they do not [illegible].

In a little room at the back of an uptown [illegible] one day last week a dozen of those songs was seen. Before him lay a pile of old English reprints and at his side stood a box of pepper. The pepper was used [illegible] upon the top of a dark brown liquid in a pail which stood at the "faker's" elbow. This pail contained his inspiration. This man was known in expressive theatrical [illegible] as a "third hander," or a retired artist. In answer to a request for recent songs, he said:

"Here's the 'Song for Me' which I am working over. It has good substance and will stand lots of twisting. I've a dozen different titles that it can be worked into. I have a dozen other songs which are equally suitable for my purpose. Each one, of course, has a different title, but the melody is about the same and nobody can touch my copyright."

There are numerous other places in this city where songs are manipulated in the same manner. The cheaper class of vaudeville actors welcome this work, but the better [illegible] become this work, but the decent [illegible].

A late litigation between the publishers brought to light some interesting facts on this subject. Both parties to this suit claimed a priority of copyright to a certain composition, one going so far as to assert that the other had stolen his composition outright. After many bitter words, much legal expenditure and months of wasted time, it was adduced in evidence by a third party, who had in the meantime been publishing the same work, that both the first named litigants had been guilty of piracy. He said that they, like himself, had been using an old English song under a new and illegible title.

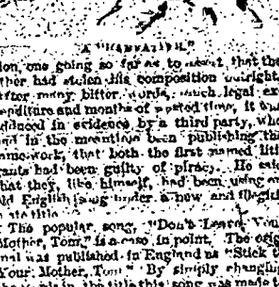
The popular song, "Don't Leave Your Mother, Tom," is a case in point. The original was published in England as "Stick to Your Mother, Tom." By simply changing the words in the title this song was made to [illegible] variety singer who brought it over had the audacity to publish her name as the author on its [illegible].

There are other applications in this much mixed up business, however. Occasionally an original song will be written by an American author, and before it has had a chance to become popular here it is taken to England. Here it is sung and becomes the rage. The process of "faking" is gone through with by the London manipulators, the song is brought back to America with a new title page, etc., and then there ensues a legal complication between the writer and the thieves, which usually ends in the inventor losing the fruits of his creation.

The manipulation of original songs is done very skillfully. Sometimes even the publishers of a song are deceived by its counterfeit. One of Gus Williams' songs, entitled "Pretty Little Dark Blue Eyes," came back from England so thoroughly rejuvenated that even the author himself failed to recognize it.

Among the other phases of "faking," which includes the theatrical as well as the musical, is the stealing of special jokes, sketches, conundrums, etc., which have been paid for at a good round figure. These original conceptions are generally taken down by a man in the audience in shorthand. They are then manipulated by individuals skilled in the art of reproduction, the most salient and taking situations being preserved. This is especially true of olio specialties and short afterpieces on the minstrel stage. Vaudeville players who, by the expenditure of hard earned money, have purchased a specialty of merit and paid a good price therefor, are annoyed and angered to find that, in a short time, their nut has been cracked by other people and the meat extracted.



"BEER" JASPER.

The public often wonders who are the progenitors of all the funny conundrums, witticisms, sketches, prologues, stump speeches and afterpieces which are produced nightly in variety upon the stage. The conundrums, as a rule, are filchers from the newspapers, and with slight alteration are made to fit the time and place. There are professional conundrum fixers, who keep files of the principal papers, especially the funny prints, and who are always supplying with the latest jokes and witticisms. These are [illegible] class [illegible] command [illegible]. An enterprising firm has [illegible], is destroying this monopoly by publishing a book containing [illegible] of the latest jokes monthly. The following are a few [illegible]:

Such jokes are [illegible] made from the rejected [illegible] by managers and others [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Fifth Congress.

SENATE.

Washington, June 6. After routine the pound the senate proceeded to executive business. When the doors re opened a message from the president was read vetoing the private pension bill. The senate then resumed consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. After some amendments the bill passed.

The senate resumed consideration of the house bill to prevent the employment of alien labor upon public buildings or work, the question being on Teller's amendment that hereafter all public works be constructed wholly of materials made and prepared within the United States.

After discussion the bill was laid aside.

The senate bill authorizing the purchase of a court passed.

The senate bill relative to the appointment of naval cadet graduates passed.

All pension bill on the calendar passed, among them bills increasing the pensions of the widow of General Thomas Kenny Smith to $75, Major General Grant to $100 and Brigadier General Schuyler Hamilton to $50, and giving a pension of $30 a month to the widow of Commodore Truxton.

HOUSE.

The senate bill providing an additional associate justice for the supreme court of Utah passed, with an amendment authorizing the governor to assign a justice to temporary duty in judicial districts.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the tariff.

McKinley moved to strike out the pending paragraph, "pickets and palings." Rejected.

The next paragraph was passed over.

With little delay the remaining paragraphs were passed over, down to the provision that existing duties be levied upon articles on the lumber schedule upon which export duties are imposed by the country from which they are imported.

Dingley of Maine proposed an amendment continuing existing duties on the lumber schedule wherever the exporting country denied our vessels right to touch, trade or take bait.

Cox of New York created a diversion by having read a dispatch from St. Louis announcing Cleveland's nomination by acclamation. Democrats burst into applause. Tarsney, who had the floor, waved a bandana rapturously. There was a moment's silence on the republican side, followed by a storm of cheers and hand clapping.

Breckinridge of Kentucky offered an amendment to Dingley's amendment, but without action on the amendment the committee rose and the house immediately went again into committee of the whole on senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill. They were concurred non-concurred in and the bill was sent to conference.

The News at the White House.

Washington, June 6.—The president passed the day very quietly at the White house. In the afternoon he went out to Oak View. There was no incident of significance or special note connected with reception of the news of his nomination. Many congratulating telegrams were received. Colonel Lamont said the president had received no communication regarding the platform from anyone. The platform was in the hands of democratic managers, and the president was probably the last person Senator Gorman saw before he left for St. Louis.

INDUSTRIAL DRAWING.

An Important Addition to Our School Instruction.

Value of the System Proved by Eastern Experience.

Results of Last Year's Teaching by Prof. Carter.

The Public Given an Opportunity for Inspection.

A month ago in describing the work of the school board [illegible] we incidentally referred to the [illegible] a course of industrial drawing [illegible] introduced into the schools. [illegible] matter before the board [illegible] attention [illegible] on account of the [illegible] recent improvements in our school system. [illegible] Many were the [illegible] ing were just taught under [illegible] patronage in Germany and France. The English people found that in all manufactures requiring design they were surpassed by the French and Germans and examination showed its cause. [illegible] was in these industrial schools. The English government wisely adopted this system of instruction and improved on it, and soon the manufactures [illegible] their old [illegible]. The [illegible] brought to the attention of the Massachusetts board of [illegible]. [illegible] setts has always led in all substantial and permanent innovations in our school systems. As most of the scholars in the public schools went out into the world to enter the various trades and manufacturing industries, the school board realized how vitally important such an addition to public instruction would be. A bill was put through the legislature, making it obligatory to give instructions in industrial drawing, but it was soon found that it was necessary to have teachers. Accordingly a normal school for the teaching of industrial drawing was established in Boston for the education of teachers for this special work. At the present time it is required that teachers shall be able to teach this system in order to obtain public schools in the large cities. The effect of the introduction of this system is already seen. Its aim is to cultivate the eye, the power of expression and also orderly thought. This training was particularly valuable to those who took up any mechanical occupation. It is valuable also to all others, for it not only trains one in observation and the use of the eye and of the hand, but as a mental training it ranks with most of the other studies pursued in the grammar schools.

Among the men most prominent in the introduction of this system of industrial drawing in Massachusetts was Charles M. Carter, who was compelled a few years ago to come to Colorado for his health. He was a teacher in the normal school and was also employed in introducing the system throughout the state, under the direction of the Massachusetts board of education. Under his superintendence the first exhibition of this industrial drawing was given in the model public schools of the country, those of Quincy, Massachusetts. The accounts of this exhibition attracted great attention throughout the east. Mr. Carter offered to introduce this system into the schools of Colorado Springs. Last fall the school board very wisely employed him. It may be a matter of some interest to the people of this city that Colorado Springs is the first city west of the Missouri river to have this system. Mr. Carter found it necessary at first to give the teachers some instructions similar to the normal school instruction given in the industrial normal school at Boston. The work this year, therefore, has been unusually difficult, because he started with a corps of teachers which was wholly untrained. The results achieved are, therefore, more remarkable.

The writer had the pleasure of visiting the public schools a few days ago to see what had been done. In a general way, we may say that this is [illegible] is founded on the [illegible] form. First, the pupils are taught observation. followed by expression. This expression is by construction, by drawing and by language. In construction, clay, paper, wood and metal are used. In drawing, working and perspective views are given in both free hand and by the use of geometric problems. Expression in language is both oral and written. Following these, comes the more elaborate study of invention or design, which we will describe later. The instruction begins in [illegible] where the children are taught to distinguish colors, primary and secondary, and how to combine the primary colors to make the secondary colors. They are taught also the simplest geometric forms. There is further instruction in molding these geometric forms and also objects in clay. For example, an ink bottle was placed upon the desk and the children from their seats molded an object like it. Some of the clay moulds were very ingeniously and accurately made by the pupils in the lowest grades. There was also some very remarkable work in the combining of various forms cut of paper.

As this was the first year the system was introduced the same course of instruction was pursued in the higher grades. Here a better quality of work was seen. In the most advanced classes in the Lincoln school the moulding showed very careful observation and very skillful execution. In this school design was taught. The children had obtained what are called "units of form" from patterns in carpets, wall papers, and dresses, etc. One hundred and fifty six of these units were placed upon the board for them to use in making various combinations, by symmetry repetition, alternation and balance. A number of these designs were upon the board. This school evidently has some future designer of our wall papers or carpets. The girls had made combinations of these units in drawing upon paper, as designs for ink wipers. They made their own designs, using simple geometric forms and sometimes leaves, and also making their own combination of colors. Every ink wiper [illegible] and [illegible] drawing but also a logical effort to make these work drawings. Those who attend the exhibition which [illegible] will understand this better than can be expressed here.

It is impossible to give our readers in this article a fair conception of this work. We are glad to say that there will be a public exhibition on Friday from nine in the morning to six in the evening and on Saturday from nine in the morning to twelve at noon. There will also be an opening exhibition, to which invitations have been issued, on Thursday evening, June 7th. Those who go will see how the children are taught to distinguish form and color, to express these discriminations in moulding in clay, in needle work, in paper work and pasteboard models, etc. It will repay any of our readers to see the work that is done. It should be all the time borne in mind that Mr. Carter had only one year to introduce the system and has been compelled also in this time to train the teachers for this work. Of course he could not establish what might be established in an eastern city, where preparation for this work is obligatory on all teachers. At the first glance the use of this system for special trades of mechanical employment will be recognized, but the real and vital value is the general and important discipline which it gives to the eye, hand and mind of all our pupils.

The Home and International Exchange association, filed its articles of incorporation with the county clerk yesterday. The incorporators are Messrs. J. H. Kerr, J. J. Corum and T. A. McMorris. These gentlemen, together with D. B. Fairley and Matt France, constitute the board of directors for the first year. The capital stock of the company is $100,000, divided into 1000 shares of the par value of $100 each. Its principal office will be in this city and its business will be conducted in the United States, Republic of Mexico, England, Germany and such other countries as the directors may determine. Its object is to lease, bond, purchase or otherwise secure, hold, control, operate, let, bargain, and sell manufacturable properties, rights, concessions and grants located within the United States, Spanish American countries and elsewhere. But more especially to secure first class gold placers and mines under long leases and bonds, (handling no property that will not pay its own way,) to secure all kinds of concessions and grants, (minerals, timbers, etc.) from state and national governments, to dispose of said properties, concessions and grants, in home and foreign markets, to examine and report on mineral and other properties, to negotiate purchases and sales of valuable properties, concessions and grants, on commission, to organize companies, home and foreign, whenever necessary to further the purposes of this association, and to take their stock, notes, bonds and other securities as cash in exchange for properties, rights, concessions and grants, to assist others in making purchases and sales when the considerations warrant it and so deal in all kinds of securities so far as it is necessary to dispose of those taken in lieu of cash.

The concluding lecture in Mr. Ragan's course was given last evening at the opera house in the presence of a fair sized audience. The subject of the lecture was the Yosemite and Yellowstone park, and is by far the best in Mr. Ragan's course. The lecture opened with a short description of San Francisco including its wonderful Chinatown, several interesting views of which were given. The illustrations of the Yosemite were the finest ever exhibited in the city, and gave a good idea of the sublime scenery in this far famed valley. The second part of the lecture was a description of the Yellowstone park, illustrated with magnificent views of its hot springs, geysers and canons. Mr. Ragan's lectures have not received the support which they certainly merited. The views were of a very high order, and strikingly true to the originals. Those who attended the lectures feel amply repaid for having done so, and will gladly welcome Mr. Ragan if should decide to revisit the city.

Insurance Carefully Written in First-Class Companies Only.

Losses Promptly and Satisfactorily Adjusted.

STRANGERS, and others not posted in our Real Estate Market, often ask the question, "Where can I best invest my money to be sure of Quick and Profitable returns?"

1st. I would say, select a locality where you have the most SUNSHINE [illegible] most of our GRAND MOUNTAIN SCENERY etc.

2nd. That you locate where you can enjoy the best WATER ADVANTAGES [illegible] by millions. A home without water in the country is a desert and when I say BEST WATER ADVANTAGES I mean not only for everything purposes which is very important, but also for DOMESTIC PURPOSES. Our water supply proposition is limited, and increasing in [illegible] every drop will be needed inside present city limits.

3rd. Buy where [illegible] is rapidly. Low priced LOTS [illegible] HOUSES, also PALACE [illegible] which will never sell back at the price. Better [illegible] other ways and secure a lot that will increase in value.

4th. Don't wait until the "Rock Island" comes in and then pay 50 per cent more than present rates.

5th. "Locate, act and secure and we will guarantee you that "BOULDER HEIGHTS" possesses all the above advantages.
